ARTIST

Being a fine art photographer allows me to capture the immense beauty of life through my camera lens and then to freely transform it; to perform a metamorphosis into an even more magical vision.
I was classically trained, starting my studies with black and white film photography. I practiced using creative techniques such as double exposures, solarization, photo montage and other darkroom techniques.

I grew up in NYC, a city of great diversity of people and places, was filled with unlimited artistic resources and incredible places such as MOMA, the MET and so many wonderful art galleries. I immersed myself in all elements of fine art. I concentrated on drawing, writing and poetry throughout my elementary and high school years.; however, it was in college where I first combined my fine arts background with photography.

My greatest inspiration came from an accomplished photographer and writer Bill Jay, my professor at Arizona State University, who taught the history of photography. He pushed me beyond my limits and the limits of each medium. As a result, instead of simply documenting places and people, I began to capture the creative aura of what I saw in my mind, allowing me to bring my images to life. It became ART!

I experimented in so many ways--multiple exposures, photo montages, the effects of different exposures, dodging and burning, sandwiching negatives to create double exposures, all within the darkroom. I loved the time I spent advancing these skills and that knowledge helps me today create similar effects in Photoshop.

STATEMENT

Life, children, and making money slowed my creativity, but my passion for photography remained. As technology changed, I was one of the first to convert to digital. As I traveled the world, I found inspiration at every turn, seeking out backstreets, canals, and other less-traveled places in wonderful cities as Italy, Venice, and Portofino. I could not resist the enchanting landscapes throughout Asia, Vietnam, and Ha Long Bay.

During COVID, my art has kept me sane. It gave me joy as I endured seclusion. I revisited my journeys through the many photographs of places and people I had captured. I was inspired as I created and combined the best into dreamlike pieces of art that entice my audience.

As I prepared Dreamscape Portraits, I wanted to showcase beautiful, strong women, exposing their inner beauty, strength, and struggles. Their tranquility was enriched with the majestic beauty of the natural environment. My own daughter, who posed for "Illumination Secrets" and the "Dreamer" became the subject of some of my first works.

I believe we are all powerful, capable beyond our perceived limits. If we constrain ourselves by the roles we are subjected to, we fail at life. However, when we go deep inside, we realize it's okay to be your real self, your greater self, we find our inner strength.

Those who judge, often fail by their judgment. We can be anything we aspire to become; just believe it so. I want to inspire the very best in each of us.
